

Futon Blonde

Breakdown Video Release

Futon Blonde is debuting the video for their latest single Breakdown. Featured on the recently released album UpperCut, the song finds guitarist Mark Webb stepping out into the role of singer/songwriter for the first time in the band's history. Despite having a different composer than the band's usual lead, Janson Sommers, Breakdown retains their relaxed yet insistent indie groove.

The band's music is self-recorded and mixed, and keeping with their DIY approach, the Breakdown video was filmed and edited by the Austin band. Filmed in various Austin parks and house parties, as well as a journey through the changing landscape of gentrified South Austin, the video is a slightly surreal slice-of-life. Mark Webb explains that the song is about "all the relationship advice I've ever received, the good and the bad".
